

Article Publishing Charges

Cogent OA was the first to introduce the Freedom Article Publishing Charge model, designed entirely with the author in mind. We make open access available to all by enabling researchers to select an APC that is appropriate based on individual funding and financial circumstances.

Freedom Article Publishing Charges

Freedom Article Publishing Charges, pioneered by Cogent OA, allow authors to choose how much to contribute towards the publication of their research in an open access journal.

Authors with funding, institutional support, or from commercial organizations should select the recommended Article Publishing Charge (APC) of $1350.

Authors without direct funding/support should talk to their librarian and faculty about options that may be available:

- Your institution may be part of the Taylor & Francis pre-payment membership scheme, which also covers Cogent OA publications. So, your APC may already be covered.
- Alternatively, most funding bodies will allow authors to use part of their research grant to cover the cost of article publishing charges.

Dr. Gerry Geitz

AUTHOR

“My institution does not provide any financial support. This means I have to contribute by myself. I really believe open access is the best way to publish research, in order to reach as many as people as possible. I will continue to try to convince my institution to contribute to open access publications, so hopefully in future they will change their policy. For now this is all I can afford.”
